RICKEY GOT TWO BIRDS

By United Press.

St. Louis, Mo., Sept. 12.—If ever two birds were killed with one throw that time was when Branch Rickey of the Browns went to Michigan last spring to take a look at a young college pitcher—a port hunter—he had long coveted. The occasion was a game between University of Michigan and Western State Normal. His attention having been drawn to the youngster, Rickey took several looks.

He sat in the grandstand and saw the pitcher go seven wonderful innings in a game that ended in a ten round 8-6 score. Michigan got two hits off the Western Normal pitcher. Those two hits were made by the pitcher Rickey had come to see. Four bases were stolen by Michigan. The twirler Rickey came to see stole 'em all. Rickey signed up that twirler, whose name is George Siler, right after the game.

After signing Siler, Rickey realized that the Western State Normal twirler wasn't done so had with an interior team behind him. That night he signed him, too. He's second girl also tossed 'em from the leftside. He is Ernest Koob and his name doesn't rhyme with book. He says it's pronounced as if spelled "Kobe."
